

Resistance in a “sacred geography”

Resistance in a “sacred geography”: Critical perspectives on land, ecology, and activism among Dersimi Alevi in Turkey

Hayal Hano?lu, Dobros?awa Wiktor-Mach, Wendelmoet Hamelink, Marcin Skupi?ski

VOLUME 160
MARCH 2025
ISSN 0016-7185

GEOFORUM

CO-EDITOR-IN-CHIEFS

Sarah Hall

Julie MacLeavy

EDITORS

Geoffrey DeVerteuil

Jessica Hope

Po-Yi Hung

Keston Perry

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

Joshua Cousins

Sin Yee Koh

Sango Mahanty

Sarah Turner

Irene Vélez-Torres

Allan Watson

Richard Yarwood

Available online at www.sciencedirect.com

ScienceDirect

– [1]

Publisher: Elsevier [2]

Year of publication: 2025

Book/ journal title: Geoforum, Volume 161, May 2025

Original Language: angielski

Abstract:

Environmental actions related to sacred geographies have recently intensified, leading to growing research interest. Many studies have explored indigenous struggles to defend the land, its ecosystems, culture and identity, especially in the Americas. This article employs the concept of sacred geography in Dersim (Tunceli), Turkey, to investigate the unique relationship between the indigenous Alevi population and their land and natural environment. Dersim is also unique for its internal politics and left-wing identity politics, which are rooted in a history of state violence, discrimination and coloniality of nature. Focusing on environmental resistance and women’s initiatives within contemporary Kurdish socio-cultural, environmental and political activism, this article explores the relationship between land and identity and how this connection motivates environmentalist actions in Dersim. Based on ethnographic findings and analysis of secondary sources, we argue that the territorialised Dersimi Alevi identity, rooted in the physical and imaginative realms of the natural landscape, its representations, and its sacredness, is intertwined with widespread resistance to state hegemony, coloniality, and neoliberal and neo-extractivist policies. Social struggles exist in multiple forms, such as protests in defence of a sacred geography; affective relations with the land; and cross-border engagement and social mobilisation through cultural initiatives, for example, the Munzur Festival where culture, environmentalism and politics come together.

<https://doi.org/10.1016/j.geoforum.2025.104263> [2]

Source URL: <https://www.etnologia.uw.edu.pl/en/publications/resistance-sacred-geography>

Links

[1] <https://www.etnologia.uw.edu.pl/en/publications/resistance-sacred-geography>

[2] <https://doi.org/10.1016/j.geoforum.2025.104263>