“Hanging Out” (19’47) is an ethnographic film, which will be screened at the 47. Migration Seminar, followed by the discussion with its author, Mari Korpela, some of the film participants and the members of Institute of Ethnology and Cultural Anthropology, University of Warsaw, Childhood Studies Unit.

Temporary labour migration of skilled professionals is increasing in various parts of the world. Often, such expatriates are accompanied by their children but very little is known of their views and experiences. In her ethnographic research project, Korpela investigated the views and experiences of such children and youth in Finland. During her fieldwork, she filmed a group of 14-year-old boys on their free time in a Finnish town. The film is a reflexive story of this collaborative film project. The film tells about the boys’ free time activities; the good times they have together and their social interactions with each other and with the researcher. The film also shows the boys’ reflections on their lives and experiences as “foreigners” in a Finnish town.

Bio:

Mari Korpela is a social anthropologist at Tampere University, Finland. Her research interests include lifestyle migration, expatriates, the anthropology of childhood, and ethnographic and visual research methods. She has conducted research among lifestyle migrants in India, including families with young children, and, in Finland, among highly skilled migrants and children in an international school. She has spent a year as a visiting professor
